The unrelenting pressure to reduce operating expenses has redefined the role of purchasing for many organizations.

Driven by global competition, companies are redesigning their procurement strategy to focus on total cost rather than unit price.

Buying smarter includes managing the supply chain and re-engineering the procurement process.

This is most evident in the field of MRO purchasing where layers of suppliers add cost, but not value, to the system.

Reducing the supplier base to improve the system's cost-effectiveness, while maintaining service and flexibility, is the ongoing challenge.
